DIRECTOR'S NOTES

I directed this play with the intention of it being a jail cell inside the mind, a dream. The character changes, or transitions, as the author likes to call them, can be closely related to the structure of dreams and how random they can be.

Further analysis of these transitions can reveal insights to a characters way of thinking. The characters are part of a whole, a machine that has worked towards and carried out its plan. They can be seen not as people but as personalities within one mind.

I pose the question: If you were in a jail cell alone who would you talk to?

I wanted to give a quick thanks to everyone involved with this production and I want to thank you, the audience, because without you this would all be just a dream.
